New Deal Leaders Gather for Conference With Roosevelt

WASHINGTON. — (AP) — At a White House conference Friday night President Roosevelt's Friday night Presidential program was placed upon the "essential" list for enactment at this session of Congress.

The conference was attended by congressional leaders and high officials of the administration and lasted two hours. Senator Barkley (Dem., Ky.), administration floor leader, told reporters that the program would be drafted in bill form, and introduced early next week.

"Do you expect much opposition?" he was asked.

"That's a speculative matter," he replied. "It's hard to tell how much opposition may develop. But, I don't expect much trouble."

No opposition developed during the White House discussion, he said, although many questions were asked, some dealing with the rate of interest to be charged on the loans. Barkley indicated a general feeling that this should be 2 1/2 to 3 per cent, but said no definite conclusion had been reached.

High Quality Stock Brings Good Prices

Registered Stock Bring as High as $125 Head at Sale Here

Unusually high prices were paid Tuesday at the weekly sale of the Sutton & Collier sales barn in Hope, for registered and other quality stock. Prices for the registered cattle ranging up as high as $125 a head. Lowest for registered cattle was $105. Good grade cows, not registered, sold for from $40 to $75.

Tuesday's total sales amounted to $8,363.90, and included 320 head of cattle, and 190 hogs.

Highest price paid for a single animal was $170, received by Homer Purdie for a purebred Hereford bull, 10 months old.

Governor Bailey to Return Sunday

Arkansas Executive Reports Progress Made on Bond Refunding

NEW YORK. — (AP) — Governor Carl E. Bailey of Arkansas, leaving for Little Rock Friday night, said his efforts to refinance a loan of $140,000,000 for refunding the states highway debt were near success.

Traveling by train, he expected to reach Little Rock Sunday morning and to issue a call for the State Board of Finance to meet Monday afternoon. Governor Bailey said a test suit would be instituted in a state court Monday "in reference to some phases of the refunding plan." He declined to specify the phases prior to his departure.

He said speed was necessary because the Supreme Court of Arkansas is expected to adjourn July 10.

He will return East, arriving in Washington next Wednesday.

For the last week he has been conferring with representatives of banks and investment houses regarding the refunding.

Details of Britain and U.S. Trade for Cotton Announced

600,000 Bales of American Cotton for 175,000,000 Pounds Rubber

HELD FOR USE IN WAR

Average Prices Are Used for Basis of Big Barter Trade

WASHINGTON. — (AP) — The United States and Great Britain signed Friday an agreement to exchange 600,000 bales of American cotton for about 175,000,000 pounds of British rubber. The agreement provided that the raw materials would be held in storage by both governments "against the contingency of a major war emergency."

Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy signed in London for the United States. Oliver Stanley, president of the British Board of Trade, signed for Great Britain.

Dr. Herbert Feis, chief of the Economic Division of the State Department and the principal United States negotiator from this side, called the agreement today the first such exchange of raw materials for war reserves in world history.

The agreement must be submitted to the Senate like any other treaty, along with enabling legislation to permit the government to acquire title to the 600,000 bales of cotton which the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation holds all collateral for loans to cotton growers.

Sees Great Value

Senator Byrnes (Dem., S. C.), a sponsor of the agreement, said the successful negotiation was due largely to "the skill and energy" of Ambassador Kennedy. He said stocks of rubber in this country are down to about 100,000 tons, compared with an average annual carryover of 300,000 tons, and told reporters the agreement was valuable as a defense measure.

"In case of an European war in which Great Britain was engaged we would find it difficult to secure adequate supplies of rubber," he said. "This would, of course, result in greatly increasing the price."

"If we did not secure additional supplies a number of our industries would close, increasing unemployment. If we sent our ships to the war zone to secure supplies, we know from our experience in the World War the risk of serious controversy with belligerents."

Byrnes said the cotton would be traded at a price of close to nine cents a pound while the figure for rubber would be about 15 cents a pound. He said that the impounding of 600,000 bales of cotton in Great Britain for seven years "will greatly improve the cotton situation."

Average Prices Used

Exact amount of rubber to come here in exchange for the 600,000 bales of cotton will be determined by taking the average price of 7-8 inch middling cotton during the period January 1 until noon today plus a charge for compression and delivery aboard ship and contrasting it with the average price of rubber for the same period.

Dr. Feis said the amount of rubber would approximate 175,000,000 pounds. American and British shipping are to divide the transport of both cotton and rubber equally between them.

Dr. Feis recited two benefits that will accrue to the United States from the deal:

1. Entirely new and additional takings of American cotton by Britain will help correct the present unwieldy cotton stocks situation in this country.

2. Without new expenditure, the United States will acquire substantial stocks of rubber—a raw material which in any major war emergency will be vital both to United States and Britain.

Fear of Dollar's Fate, Pegging of Farm Prices Keeps Business Shaky, Says Flynn

Power Over Money Should Be Turned Back to Congress

Author Stresses Importance of Settling Fate of the Dollar

HAS RECOVERY PLAN

Last of Six Articles Points Way to Investment, Recovery

Last of six articles on ways and means to break the jam of idle investment money now impeding a business revival.

By JOHN T. FLYNN
(Writer for NEA Service)

The government should put an end, once and for all, to all uncertainty about the fate of the dollar.

This includes not merely the matter of further devaluation, but the issuance of currency against the gold profit.

To this end the President's power over the dollar should be ended and Congress should resume its control over the subject.

But this not nearly so serious as the possibility of the conversion of the gold profits into currency. The fear of that should be definitely ended by a declaration by both party leaders.

Stop Pegging Farm Prices

As for farm troubles—at least one reform should be inaugurated. There should be an end to all price fixing, including price pegging on the major crops, subsidy payments and price pegging through the Surplus Commodity Corporation.

In fact, the whole policy of price pegging throughout industry and agriculture should be ruthlessly fought everywhere.

Not least important among recovery plans should be an end at once to the policy of frightening the American people about war.

The administration has pretty generally convinced the people that if another European war breaks out we are sure to get into it. Thus we are being more and more weakened by adding to our own troubles the dislocations inherent in European war scares.

The incessant talk about possible invasions and fears of foreign foes and the accompanying orgy of war expenditures should be ended.

Reform Social Security Act

The Social Security Act has been somewhat improved by the adoption of the reform so long urged here, namely, the abolition of the 47-billion-dollar reserve. But the act is still full of imperfections. The reforms urged by the recent advisory council should be adopted.

Congress, in addition, should make a firm stand against such movements as the Townsend plan. That, in its extreme form, has been squelched. But it will bob up again. Leaders of all parties should unite in opposition to this so that the country may be assured of the hopelessness of the plan.

Cycling Fine Sticks

BELFAST, Ireland. — (AP) — Booked for cycling after dark without lights a Rosslea, County Fermanagh, man gave his name as "De Valera."

"Come now, would you be foolin' me?" said the officer.

But the man was telling the truth. He was named De Valera Mulligan by his parents, ardent admirers of Eire's premier.

John T. Flynn Submits Program for Recovery

1. Ceaseless war on all forms of monopoly and private trade controls.
2. Cleaning up the three great investment industries—building construction, railroad and utilities, including readjustment of building wages scales and working conditions, war on labor rackets, war on material and sub-contractor combinations, drastic reorganization of the railroads and a definitive policy about utilities.
3. A government spending and investment program in which the distinction between spending and investment is carefully preserved—spending to be paid for out of taxes and all investment out of borrowed funds.
4. Reorganization of the whole federal tax structure so that all taxes collected at the points at which money is spent or invested shall be abolished and, save in special cases, taxes shall be levied on incomes of all brackets, in such a way as to bring about equalization between individual and corporate incomes.
5. Revision of the Social Security Act, to lighten the tax burden involved without lessening the benefits.
6. Put an end to all uncertainty about the fate of the dollar both as to further devaluation or the issuance of currency against the gold profit and return of control over money to Congress.
7. Put an end to all American war scares and check the expenditure of further sums on war preparations.
8. In the case of farm relief, adopt the principle that the government will abandon all attempts to peg farm prices.

Arson Suspect Said to Be a Minister

T. J. Prince Was Pastor of Gillham Methodist Church Circuit

The DeQuene Daily Citizen, in a front-page article published Friday, said that T. J. Prince of Gillham, Sevier county, arrested in the investigation of the burning of the Princess hotel at Ashdown, is a preacher.

"The Rev. Prince is pastor of the Gillham Methodist church circuit, having been serving in that charge since last November."

"It is said he is a relative of E. R. Jarvis, Hope cafe operator who had purchased the Ashdown hotel a short time before the fire occurred."

"The Gillham minister, according to reports, had been employed by Jarvis to manage the Ashdown hotel," the newspaper report continued.

Income Tax Revision

WASHINGTON. — (AP) — Vice-President Garner has suggested that congress make drastic reductions in income tax exemptions at its next session, it was reported reliably Saturday.

Long to Co-operate With Oil Industry

Governor Leche to Resign Monday; Welcomes Probe of WPA

BATON ROUGE, La. — (AP) — Earl K. Long, still putting his ascendancy to the governorship on the "if" basis, promised the oil industry of other states full co-operation in promotion of production.

"No one in the oil business need have any fear about me," Long said at his home at Winnfield, La., when questioned about reports Texas oil men were worried lest he open wide Louisiana's production. "If I should get in as governor I will co-operate fully with the oil people and the federal government. I believe in production. Without it the oil industry would be ruined."

Long, who will step up from lieutenant governor next week when Gov. Richard W. Leche carries out his announced resignation, promised the state's contemplated no purge as feared in some circles, "that he had no plan to call a special session of the legislature, and that he contemplated no drastic changes in the state government at present."

Leche fixed next Monday at 11 a. m. as the time his resignation becomes effective. "If they (the attorney general's office) don't find me a method of resigning by then I'm just going to walk out de facto," Leche said, shortly after he signed a contract for construction of a new charity hospital at Monroe, La., which he described as his last official act.

Governor Leche made his first public comment on the WPA investigation in Louisiana new in progress, with the statement he welcomed it.

"We will defray the expenses of any responsible body, up to $10,000, to make any investigation they want of WPA work in Louisiana," he said. He declared that he had paid for all work and materials used on his farm in Covington, La., which has been mentioned in a newspaper story which caused state WPA Administrator J. H. Crutcher to request the investigation.

Watch That Kentucky Primary for New Deal Test

By PRESTON GROVER

WASHINGTON. — One of the first tests for New Deal and anti-New Deal delegates is coming in Kentucky a few weeks from now in a show with almost the same actors as were in the eye-gouging election last year.

The candidates are different but the two men in the saddle are the same, Governor Chandler and Senator Barkley.

Chandler's term as governor expires this year and he is backing Keene Johnson, his lieutenant governor, to succeed him. In Kentucky a governor cannot succeed himself. Barkley, in turn, is backing John Young Brown, who once ran for senator. Running independent of either group is Charles D. Agnew.

The primary is the first Tuesday in August. And in Kentucky except in special circumstances, the primary is the election.

So far there aren't enough sharply defined local issues to distinguish the rival Barkley and Chandler candidates from each other. Both are advocating a revision of the state's old age contributions so Kentucky will get the full $15 federal contribution instead of the $3 and $4 a month for the aged which is paid to the state now on a dollar-for-dollar matching basis.

A Bigger Issue

The big interest in the Kentucky primary is not the social security business but what faction will control selection of the delegates to the 1940 national convention. Naturally the winning faction will take care of that.

Before another month is out the contest may center on the national issue and not on the local candidates. If Brown, Barkley's candidate, wins the delegation to the 1940 Democratic convention almost certainly will be a pro-New Deal crowd. It will be available to President Roosevelt or a candidate of the President's choosing. That candidate may, of course, be Senator Barkley.

In event Johnson, Chandler's candidate, wins the coming primary, the Chandler delegates to the convention also may be nominally instructed to Barkley as a favorite son. But they stop complimenting Barkley with a vote they will be available to the Chandler faction, and that is decidedly not New Deal. Chandler is not forgetting that President Roosevelt campaigned in person against him last year in Kentucky in order to save Barkley, the administration leader in the Senate. It is already accepted by Kentuckians will be anti-Roosevelt delegates unless it develops before the convention that Roosevelt leaders will control it.

Close Race

This far before the primary a race even closer than a year ago is developing. Last year Barkley's organization in Louisville delivered him a 35,000 majority in the city. He won the senatorial nomination over Chandler, 300,000 to 225,000. But Barkley's city leader in Louisville is dead and his candidate as a result can't be so sure of the city's vote.

Generally throughout the state

Chandler has the better organization and the Barkley faction is handicapped this year by the probability that President Roosevelt will not come in to help.

Without control in Louisville and without Roosevelt, the 75,000 majority that went for Barkley last year could shrink out of sight.

If the above sounds complex, keep in mind that Kentucky politics is a complex business. Just to help clear up the picture, it might be added that Brown, who is Barkley's candidate, used to be a Chandler man while Johnson, now Chandler candidate, once was in an organization opposed to Chandler.

Kentucky, however, likes its politics thick as soup.

The Embarrassing Few

In any large group there are bound to be a certain number of persons who by their very action display their bad manners and lack of breeding. It was, of course, too much to hope that this would not hold true in Canada and the United States—which together have a population of nearly 150,000,000—when King George and Queen Elizabeth came visiting.

While there were a few untoward incidents during the trip across Canada, they amounted to little compared to the antics of a small group of Washington congressmen who were determined to embarrass the President and used the Capitol as their rostrum.

They first seized upon the detention in Detroit of Sean Russell, Irish Republican Army leader, and threatened to organize a boycott of the congressional reception for their Majesties. Finally Russell's release was arranged, but not until a bit of unpleasant publicity had resulted.

Then one congressman of Irish descent dispatched a telegram to King George—who at the moment was a guest of this same congressman's government in the White House—reminding him of the rather sizeable British war debt. Following this, a suggested royal banquet menu was released by this representative to newspapers. Calculated to be funny but causing only embarrassment, the menu made various references to Revolutionary war engagements.

Regardless of a person's nationality or political beliefs, such manners as these can be labeled nothing short of rude. The king and queen had been invited here by the head of the United States government and while they were his guests, they were entitled to the same politeness as an invited guest in your home.

Whether Their Majesties were conscious of these embarrassing actions will never be known. They, of course, are too well bred themselves to even hint that they were aware of what was going on.

If they are, however, it is hoped that they will judge Americans by the millions of well-behaved citizens instead of the handful of bad actors. The king and queen have left in America a good impression. Americans hope that they carry home with them pleasant memories of this nation.

Co-Ordination of Muscle Control First Signs of Baby's Dawning Intelligence

This is the first of a series of four articles by Dr. Fishbeln on how to gauge the intelligence of your baby.

Is my child a genius, average, or dull?

Mothers would like that question answered the day the baby is born. But an accurate answer is not possible in most instances until some years have passed.

More important is the question: Has this child the capacity to adapt himself to the conditions under which human beings live? The mastery of subjects studied in school rarely indicates adaptability to the conditions of life. The reticent child with a good mind may be underestimated; the aggressive child, with characteristics that will certainly interfere with success, may be overestimated.

The earliest signs of the development of intelligence in the young infant are closely integrated with the acquisition of control of the muscles, and emotional behavior, in a large part, is learned. The types of behavior present at birth will be modified and changed by the infant's experiences.

The human infant at birth is helpless and able to perform only those functions which are necessary to maintain life. He can suck, swallow, and cry to gain attention. New abilities are rapidly acquired. He learns to seize the nipple with less help. If it slips from his mouth, he moves his head and lips and later employs his hands in order to find it again.

During the first few months of life, ability to use the eyes develops rapidly. The baby will stare intently for a long time at bright objects, such as lamps, sunlight on the wall, or windows. During the second month, the eyes follow moving objects. Movements of the head accompany the eye movements after the first few weeks of life.

At about the end of the second month, the ability to manipulate objects begins to develop. There may be a jerky waving of objects placed in the hand.

After another month, the infant uses the hands and fingers for making brief exploratory movements, but association of eye and hand movement does not develop until a little later. Without looking at the objects, the child moves them with his hands. He gazes with interest but makes no attempt to reach for things he wants.

By three or four months of age, the child has learned to connect his hand with his mouth, to coordinate his eyes, to pull or push his feet and hands, and to hold up his head without support. If he is lying prone, he can lift the upper part of his body.

By the time he is 8 months old, he should have learned to turn himself over and should be making efforts to sit erect.

HIGHLIGHTS FROM LATEST BOOKS

Whether you are building, remodeling, or merely re-arranging your home, you can do no better than turn to Dorothy Field's simple, expert advice in "The Human House" (Houghton, Mifflin, $2.75). Charts, sketches, plans, photographs supplement the text, a brief excerpt of which is given here.

When we have glimpsed the complications in the modern problem of finding suitable homes for our families and realizing how sharp the conflict is between our various needs and desires, another factor will begin to rear its ugly head. That is the fact that any decision we make about our house is apt to involve our style of living. If asked point blank whether the family income entitles us to the essentials of existence, comfort, or luxury, we may reply firmly that all we ask for is comfort. . . .

Comfortable housing provides heat to 70 degrees at zero weather, sunlight in every room for one hour each day, good water and sanitation, equipment for cooking, space for work, spaces for sleeping, enough privacy for decency, and storage space for the family and its possessions. Comfortable housing implies an easy but informal style of living.

Luxurious housing provides all comforts, with, in addition, refinements, niceties, amenities, beauties which reflect the owner's or builder's tastes rather than needs. In luxury housing, for the first time, formality is appropriate and not ridiculous. . . .

Within a given price range, say within the comfortable class, the difference between the $5000 and the $10,000 house should be not an essential difference in floor plan, but a difference in amount spent on physical comfort, labor-saving equipment, etc. If you plan to live an easy, informal existence you might spend your money on insulation in your walls and ceilings rather than on a formal dining room. You can plan a space where the dining room may go later if you want to, and add it when your income makes formally a pleasure, or a necessity, rather than a chore. . . .

SOCIETY

Mrs. Sid Henry Telephone 321

So many hearts are brave. Each day I see
The lifted banners of their courage shine
Out of the myriad eyes that look in mine:
The Banners mankind carry as they march
To prove that they are undefeated still,
Though tired feet must often drag behind;
Though there be scarcely strength to climb the hill,
Brave women, and brave men, who go their way
Without the blare of music down the street;
Without the cheers or the encouragement
Of words that would be heartening and sweet,
So many have the courage to go on—
Undaunted by their loss, or pain, or fear:
Beaten perhaps, yet holding in their souls
The beautiful bright quality of cheer.
So many hearts are brave—though well they know
How rough the road is their feet must go—
Selected.

defense forces and to industry. Dr. Feis estimated the amount of rubber to be required would represent between 15 and 20 per cent of annual American consumption. It will be turned over to war and navy departments for storage along with other war materials reserves.

The two governments agreed not to dispose of the reserves mentioned in their record for seven years except in war emergencies. Afterward they must consult each other if they decide to dispose of their stocks and must take all possible steps to avoid disturbance of the markets. But they may "turn over" their stocks from time to time to keep the materials fresh.

Discussions which had been considered between the United States and Great Britain for exchange of wheat and tin have been dropped.

Secretary Hull said the exchange arrangement was not in conflict with his trade agreements policy designed to promote usual commercial relations between nations. It would not, he declared, interfere with national market conditions.

When the City Is an Oven, You Can 'Radiate' Coolness

By ALICA MART
NEA Service Staff Writer

Sure to feel pretty neglected and quite out of the running along about now is the woman who is in town and, except for an occasional weekend and a brief holiday, expects to stay in town, hot weather or no hot weather. For weeks she has read about what to wear at mountain resorts, how to make up on the beach how to conduct herself on a yacht, on a farm, at a dude ranch. She knows that this is a year to suit yourself about sunbathing, that short, casual coiffures are best for vacations, that denim slacks wash like handkerchiefs and cotton housecoats are perfect for breakfast on the terrace.

What she really wants to know, however, is how in the world to look crisply fresh from nine to five in the office when the thermometer hovers around 90, and somebody turns the one and only electric fan away from her desk.

She'd like to know how to get through a morning's shopping without looking wilted. Or how to manage to look cool and radiate good nature across the dinner table after a day of marketing, dusting, cooking, and trying to keep Junior in his own sand pile.

Check List of "Coolers"

Here, then, are a few summer grooming suggestions which the non-ventilator may find well worth considering.

Use lighter creams, lighter perfumes, a lighter makeup base. Let your vacationing, sunbanned friends have dark powders and scarlet lipsticks. Delicate, pastel shades of rouge and lipstick are best for hot days in town.

Clean your face many times a day. Always carry cleansin pads and a tiny bottle of cologne in your purse. If your permanent wave is getting slightly loose looking, have a new one—perfectly one which curls your shining tresses to within half an inch of the scalp. Wear your hair off your neck, of course, and adopt a coiffure which you can manage easily between visits to the hairdresser.

Have at least two—preferably three—baths or showers a day. Now and then, skip the towel and let the air dry your hair. However, stay out of drafts during this "natural drying." Have in your wardrobe as many washables as you possibly can. For some reason, a freshly washed dress makes you look cooler than you probably feel.

Apply an anti-perspirant two or three times a week, or use a deodorant twice a day. Keep legs and underarms hair.

Keep Mind Off the Weather
Wear comfortable shoes, a girdle not quite as tight as those you wore last winter, and remember that frequent washings lengthen the life of any foundation garment.

Above all, refuse to discuss the weather, and keep in mind that if you look cool, scrupulously clean and neatly groomed, you'll mind the heat less than one whose nose is shiny, hair straggling, clothes unpressed. In the summer time, grooming becomes doubly important from the point of view of comfort as well as appearance.

For oily skins, there are special anti-shine preparations—to be applied before makeup. They are to be patted on lightly after the skin has been washed with soap and water. The anti-shine product which the model above is using is a powder.

RAISING A FAMILY

By Olive Roberts Barton

Do As I Say, Not As I Do," Is Wrong Way to Raise Child

A boy of thirteen was in disgrace. He had answered his father back, when corrected about his table manners, saying "Maybe I do shovel my food in too fast but I don't grunt all the time at what I get to eat." Which was heresy to say the least.

"Why, you young scamp," roared Father. "I have a notion to take your hide for that. What do you mean?"

"Now, now," begged mother, "it's all right. Mack didn't mean a thing." But she knew better than that. The boy had eyes and ears to know that his dad was imperfect, too. Nobody dared to say a word to the testy-tempered man, when he left the bathroom floor swimming, or turned off Mother's radio music without apology to hear a ball game. But let Mother cook the steak, too long, hang a coat in the wrong place or put his book back in the book case and he made a fuss.

The rest of the meal passed in silence. But the very air was charged.

Mack went to his father after dinner and said, "I apologize, Dad. I didn't mean to be impudent. I am sorry."

Father looked at this young string-bean of his, so recently riding piggy-back on his shoulders and playing bear on the floor that it seemed like yesterday, and realized that something had happened to both of them.

He drew the lad to him and said, "Let's take a walk, Mack. I want you to tell me what the trouble is, as well as you can. Maybe I can understand better than you can talk, but go ahead and say it."

"That was all I meant," said the yearling. "Sometimes I am not so good, and sometimes you are not so good, either. But I get heck and so does Mother and so does brother sometimes. But you see—"

"Yes, I see. I am as much of a problem to you as you are to me, but I won't take telling. I guess all older people are problems of one kind or another."

The new structure was completed several weeks ago. It contains an auditorium, national guard armory, all municipal offices, a jail and police headquarters.

Swift Dive in Plane Restores Her Voice

PITTSBURGA, Pa. (AP)—A swift dive in an airplane from a 5,300-foot level restored to Mrs. Frances Decara of West Palm Beach, Fla., the voice and hearing she had lost for five days.

Pilot Raymond Elder reported Friday. The dive was made at the suggestion of a physician in Latrobe, Pa., where Mrs. Decara was visiting friends, after she had told him a fast automobile ride down a mountain road had "opened" her ears a little.

Elder said the woman could not account for the sudden loss of her voice and hearing. After the dive, Mrs. Decara told him one ear had "plugged up again," but she could still hear normally from one ear and speak without difficulty.

$250,000 Pair of Hose

Half a million dollars went into duPont company research to develop the synthetic yarn called Nylon, used in the sheer, cobwebby hose that adorns the legs of Miss Naomi Anderson, above. Nylon, made of coal, air and water, resists runs, has great elasticity, fits triply. Development of Nylon has the Japanese silk industry worried, offers a serious competitive threat to the traditional silk hose. No Nylon hose have been sold yet, although employees and wives of duPont executives have been wearing them.

Prosecutor in Annenberg Case May Be 'Dewey' of Democrats

By MARY MARBERY
NEA Service Special Correspondent

CHICAGO — A Democratic Dewey may be in the making here. He's William J. Campbell, whose smile is just as boyish and engaging as that of Republican Presidential Possibility Thomas E. Dewey in New York City. Campbell is the young U. S. district attorney presenting the Annenberg and Skidmore cases to the grand jury.

He smugly insists that he is, without political ambitions, but if the grand jury indicts Moses L. Annenberg, wealthy publisher and racketeer, or William "Bilky" Skidmore, gambling czar, Campbell might become a national figure over night.

While New York's Dewey built step by step his now national reputation as a prosecutor, starting with minor fights and building up to the conviction of Tammany Jimmy Hines, Campbell enters "big-time prosecution" after only a few months in office.

Native of Chicago, the grand jury is to determine whether Annenberg or Skidmore have failed to pay income taxes they should have paid. Trial of either indicted would command national attention.

Born on Chicago's west side and educated in Catholic schools, Campbell was graduated from Loyola University in 1926 with an LL.B. He is now 36, a large, well built man with thick, graying hair, a young, sun-burned face and a hearty handclasp.

"I've never before held a political job," says Campbell, "and I prefer to regard myself as a lawyer, with an opportunity to do useful piece of work in my profession. When the President appointed me as head of the Illinois NYA, it was a merit appointment. I did receive generous praise during my administration from the President, and I'm anxious to reflect credit on those who appointed me in this job. I'm not anxious to carve out a career, however."

Despite his duties as district attorney, Campbell still is acting head of the Illinois NYA. He has been interested in youth and its problems ever since, as a young lawyer, he defended poor young criminals as counsel for the Big Brother organization. Then, as personal attorney to Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, he became a cofounder of the Catholic Youth Organization. He considers juvenile delinquency the most important field in crime today.

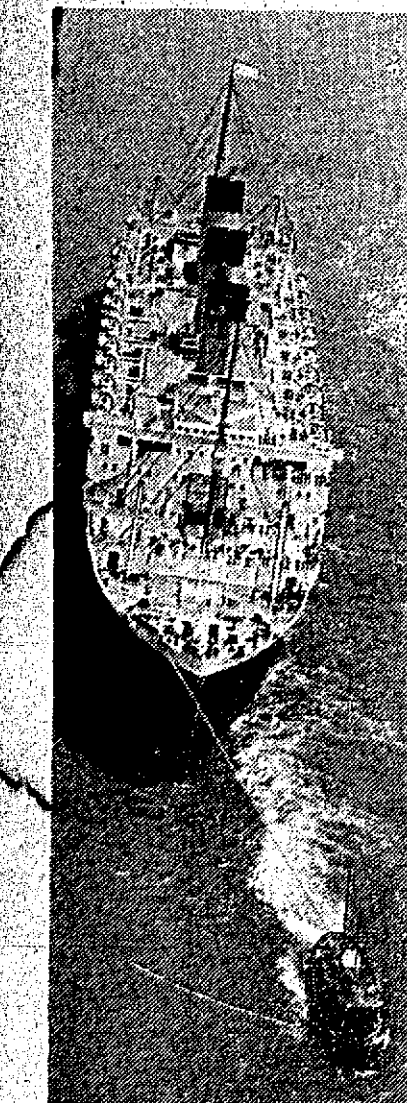

Put Youngsters to Work
As NYA administrator, Campbell started a state-wide job hunt, sponsored 200 mass meetings throughout the state, and got jobs for 6187 youths in 50 days. Recently he opened a job-creating contest in which 30 prizes will be given to youths for ideas on new and unusual jobs that can be created.

Campbell takes keen interest in prosecution of cases which might reveal big income-tax dodgers. "It is exceedingly important," he feels, that honesty in public and private business dealings be restored, Campbell declares. "Its most important phase is the effect on the juvenile mind," he contends. "Boys tend to learn respect for the law when they see that the big shoe are prosecuted."

Two years ago Campbell married Marie Cloherty. They have a daughter, Marie, 8 months old.

The total value of hotel property in the United States is more than $5,000,000,000.

Midget Tug Tows A Giant Liner

One hundred and thirty tons was pulling 43,450 in the airway above, when the 763-foot liner Ile de France sailed from New York under tow of the 90-foot tug Sheila Moran. Moguls Go to the Track, Leaving the Movie-Making to Those Who Know.

HOLLYWOOD.—Now that another racing season has begun—this one at Hollywood Park—movie directors are cheered by the prospect of being able to make better pictures. The idea is that the producers and other studio bigwigs will spend many of their afternoons at the track, thus leaving the real moviemakers free from interference.

This view of the situation is being told around town for a laugh, but like most good jokes it includes considerable truth. For evidence, look at the several best-selling flickers made in England by American companies. Most of the directors of those films have said that they were able to make them just as they pleased, without excessive meddling. And right here in Hollywood there is a quickening trend toward giving directors complete authority over their pictures.

There now are eight or ten producer-directors, and their features are more distinctive and more successful than those of any overboarded and closely supervised group.

All For Front
A prosperous front is considered important in the colony, and a former star who desperately hopes to make a comeback has been trying gamely to keep possible employers from knowing that he's broke.

This fellow goes to the track frequently, and before each race he can be seen standing in line before one of the $100 or $500 betting windows. Most of the people who see him there figure he's still in the money. But he never makes a bet of any such size. Upon reaching the window he fumbles with some bills and murmurs to the seller, "Sorry—I changed my mind," or "I didn't notice, but I'm in the wrong line."

Sentiment On the Track
One of the movie moguls has spent a fortune on a racing stable which has made a very poor showing. When his favorite nag came in seventh in an important race, the owner blamed everything on the jockey. "Why can't you follow instructions?" he stormed. "I told you to hold him in, in fifth or sixth position, and then make your move at the three-quarter. Why didn't you come up then, like you were supposed to?"

"Because, boss," explained the jock sadly, "I just couldn't bear to leave the horse."

Requiescat In Pace, Joe Miller
This year the movies could celebrate with trumpets and paeanry two major anniversaries. One would be the golden jubilee of the invention, by Thomas Edison, of the Kinetoscope. The industry has been talking about some observation of that occasion, although it may not get around to doing anything elaborate.

The other anniversary is a bicentennial but probably will pass unnoticed. It was 200 years ago that the first edition of Joe Miller's joke book was printed. Hollywood gag men, and those who have strayed into radio, owe an inestimable debt to the old music hall comedian whose name has become a byword in all show business. True, it's no complaint these days to brand a gag as a Joe Miller joke. But a lot of them are, whether anybody likes it or not.

Another Joe—Joe E. Marks, screen writer and actor, and former vaudeville comic, knows all about Joe Miller because Marks has collected a large library on wit and humor. He says Miller had nothing to do with the book published in England in 1739. It was titled, "Joe Miller's Jests, or the Wits' Vade-Mecum." The flyleaf added: "Being a collection of the most brilliant jests; the politest repartees;

Washington Daybook

By PRESTON GROVER

WASHINGTON — The forest fire season has started in the Rocky Mountains and on the Pacific slope, a statement which does not stir easterners but which means to westerners four months of losses as bitter and twice as dramatic as those in the Dust Bowl.

We have been in forest fire zones and know how desperately western men will fight fires in the timber. To them the forests are a personal thing, furnishing grazing for their cattle and sheep in summer, jobs for men in the cutting months, fuel and building material for remote families, and recreational spots for hundreds of thousands. A well timbered mountain area will store water for irrigation until late in the summer but snow on a burned-over area comes cascading down in wasting spring floods.

As an AP correspondent at Boise Idaho, we used to cover forest fires, sometimes by automobile but mostly by telephone. Forest fires don't burn in convenient places, but in remote sections where only a rancher and his horse or a forest service outpost and a gold prospector are available to fight them.

Tas to Telephone
Telephoning 20 miles into Central Idaho forest country, two-thirds of the way over singlewire forest service lines looped from tree to tree, is an experience in endurance and refined hearing. We would put in a telephone call for an outlying forest lookout post and then wait 15 minutes with ear glued to the receiver for the remote voice answering "hello." That was all we ever heard at first, as a dozen ranch telephone lines would cut in promptly. Some of the people along the line were right up in the fire area themselves and could get official information only on the press calls.

Of course a dozen listeners cutting in on one of those hand-grinding telephone systems so weakened the circuit that we could not hear the forest operative. It took half a day one summer to solve that. We finally agreed that if the ranchers would stay off the line while we got the news we would call back promptly and report all we learned. They were agreeable and that went on for weeks while a huge fire burned.

It meant two telephone calls, one to get the news and one to relay it to the ranchers. This is the first time we ever explained why the telephone bills mounted up so. We doubt if it doubled the bills completely however. The telephone company seemed to understand the situation.

We have seen men come out of the burning timber with skin blistered over their arms and cheeks, grab a ham sandwich and a mug of coffee which they could scarcely get down because of fried lips, and dash back into the woods without an hour of rest in 20.

No Rest for Flyers
Forest fires burn hardest from early afternoon to about eight at night. But night means no rest for forest crews. While the fire is reasonably quiet they must dig trenches, cut brush and timber slashways and suppress outlying spot-fires started by flying bark or branches.

Until you have seen one you can't imagine the incredible fury of a forest fire. They will burn over the space of a big city in an afternoon. A man on a horse can't outrun one in rough country.

They arrest people out west for throwing cigar butts or match stubs out of automobile windows. Many experienced timber men methodically tuck their spent cigars back into a can, to be disposed of in a creek.

Fisherman Finds Ship 240 Years Under Water

MIAMI, Fla.—(AP)—After 240 years, the British Admiralty knows that H. M. S. Winchester sank in the shallows off the Florida coast below Miami. A negro fisherman told a group of Miami men he had seen objects on the ocean bed that looked like cannon. A few months ago a salvage party went out. It returned with 32 cannon entrusted with barnacles and rusted by long years under water.

Some identifying marks remained, and a description was sent to London. The Admiralty told the group here that the marks identified the old guns as coming from the naval vessel Winchester, which disappeared in 1695 while on duty in this area.

More than 65,000,000 pounds of castor beans are imported annually for oil alone.

or spring. "Break your match before you throw it away," is a sign found hundreds of places in the forests. If you break it the chances are you will make certain it is out.

In spite of all such precautions, more than half of all forest fires are man-caused. But if all mancauses were eliminated there would still be forest fires, although not nearly so many. Lightning starts them. Sometimes they seem to start by themselves almost, so hard are they to explain.

You needn't get panicky and avoid the forests. They are safer than the public highways. But when you leave camp, work over your camp fire until you can put your and in the ashes.

These Jail Birds Just Won't Stay Out

MIAMI, Fla.—(AP)—Capt. Chris Switzer is having trouble with jail birds that he has to toss out. They really are birds, flying in such great numbers that the city's skyscraper jail that they wing right inside through the bars.

Switzer says he turns his office lights off, uses a flashlight to catch the night flying creatures and tosses them to freedom. Some are as fat as quails, he reported.

CHAPTER III

INASMUCH as the hedge that surrounded the swimming pool was fairly high, Roy did not perceive an elderly gentleman who sat in the shelter of it on the side furthest from the garage. Looking down from his window on the first morning after his installation as a relative of Baskerville's, he saw only a tiled tank full of limpid green water. He hesitated. He did not know whether it was permissible for a cousin of the Gannings' chauffeur to disport himself in these waters. On the other hand, the probabilities were that no one would know about it. The hour was early and the pool a considerable distance from the house. Roylton Augustus decided to take a chance.

While donning bathing suit he reviewed events. True to her word, Miss Babs Ganning had appeared at five o'clock the previous afternoon bringing the intelligence that one Baskerville would be delighted to receive an impromptu relative. Mr. Baskerville, it appeared, knew which side of his bread carried the butter. Mr. Baskerville would keep his mouth shut save when acknowledging, if pressed, that Mr. Roy Herring was a son of his mother's sister, now deceased.

After this things had slowed down. Miss Babs Ganning, with the twins, Ronald and Wilfrid, had gone to a dance in the evening. Mr. Roy Herring had therefore been at a loose end. Mr. Baskerville, however, a saturnine individual addicted to cards, had suggested a small game of two-handed poker. And, in the privacy of the garage, Mr. Herring had taken Mr. Baskerville over to the tune of 75 cents.

MEANWHILE, J. Pemberton Ganning sat in the shadow of the hedge that enclosed the swimming pool. He was not in one of his lighter humors and his seamed face, bent over a book, wore an annoyed frown. An indifferent sleeper, J. Pemberton could remember no night when he had been deeper in the black books of Morpheus than the one just passed. And the worst of it was that he had gone to sleep upon hitting the pillow, a delightful and rare phenomenon. For perhaps an hour he had lain wrapped in slumber. Then, things had happened.

A sort of twanging, tweaking noise had crept under the curtain of sleep. Relentlessly it had caused his eyes to open, his ears to quiver and his body to assume a sitting position. Then he had listened. The sound had been one that J. Pemberton, connoisseur of night noises though he was, had difficulty in placing. But, after some minutes, he had made a diagnosis. It derived its origin, in his opinion, from a banjo played with jerky tunelessness beneath his window.

With this banjo, J. Pemberton Ganning had idly, summarily, leaping from his bed, he had rushed to the window and caused the night to echo with his views on banjos and all who played them. He had been rewarded with a scuffle of unseen feet and silence. But Morpheus, insulted, had refused to return. And J. Pemberton Ganning, after a night of sheep totalling, had crept forth to enjoy the early morning sun, determined to hold an inquisition as soon as the younger members of his household were abroad. He sat now in a steam chair enveloped in an old gray blanket. The book he read was entitled "Invertebrates of the Terrestrial Period."

J. Pemberton Ganning delivered himself. "If you're going to swim," he said irritably, "swim. But don't sit there throwing water around." He stopped, struck by a thought. "Hey, who are you, anyhow?" The young man came out of the waters. J. Pemberton noted that he had gray eyes and a magnificent torso. "I?" said this young man. "Oh, I—I'm—er—I'm Baskerville's cousin."

"I want to know," said J. Pemberton, "how you come to be here."

J. Pemberton appeared above the hedge, the ends of his mustache bristling, the blanket clinging to his shoulders.

From behind the hedge came a splash. J. Pemberton was but dimly aware of it. He supposed vaguely that his daughter or one of those idiotic twins was disporting in the pool. The next instant a stream of water cascaded suddenly over the hedge, deluging him, the gray blanket and "Invertebrates of the Terrestrial Period."

J. PEMBERTON bounced up angrily. He appeared above the hedge, the ends of his mustache bristling and his graying locks matted by the flying water. With the blanket clinging to his shoulders he was not unlike an elderly bull walrus with a chill.

"Hi!" he shouted indignantly. "Stop that!"

He had spoken before looking. He now perceived that the cause of the commotion was a young man in a blue bathing suit whose hands flailed the sunlit surface of the pool in a superabundance of good spirits.

"Hi!" he exclaimed again. "What the devil are you doing?" The young man looked up. He was not sure about the apparition on the other side of the hedge. It might be a walrus. But walruses, he knew, were uncommon in the vicinity. Accordingly, he ceased flailing in order to study the problem.

J. Pemberton Ganning delivered himself. "If you're going to swim," he said irritably, "swim. But don't sit there throwing water around."

"Hey, who are you, anyhow?" The young man came out of the waters. J. Pemberton noted that he had gray eyes and a magnificent torso.

"I?" said this young man. "Oh, I—I'm—er—I'm Baskerville's cousin."

"I want to know," said J. Pemberton, "how you come to be here."

"WELL, it's like this," the young man put on a blue-and-white striped dressing gown. "I happened to be passing so I thought I'd drop in on Baskerville, he being my cousin. And he suggested that I stay a night or two with him. So I did. I sleep over the garage."

"You do, eh? Who gave you permission?"

"Why, I think Baskerville got it from a young lady. A very pretty young lady, with violet eyes."

"Hump! That would be my daughter!"

"Oh, is she your daughter?"

"She is," said J. Pemberton, in a what-about-it tone.

"Well, you're very lucky," said the young man.

"How's that?"

"You're lucky to have such a delightful daughter."

"If you," said J. Pemberton, pursuing a favorite theme, "had a daughter who filled the house with imbeciles who look exactly alike, who play golf all over the lawn in the daytime and banjos all night, you wouldn't talk about luck."

A suspicion struck J. Pemberton. "You don't play a banjo, do you?" he asked dangerously.

"Me? Well—er—that is, no."

Mr. Ganning looked relieved. "What do you do, then?"

"I—er—well . . . Roy stopped, confused, then saw light. "I'm an evolutionist."

"What?" He was unprepared for the roar which escaped J. Pemberton Ganning.

"An evolutionist," he continued doubtfully. "You know, Darwin and—those fellows. I am a subscriber to the theory that man came upon this earth through a long series of—of, shall we say, incarnations, beginning with what is called an amoeba and ending, perhaps, with the anthropoid ape. Just how life itself got started I am unprepared to say. . . . He ceased, partly because he was out of ideas and partly because of J. Pemberton Ganning's face. Behind his mustaches that face was positively beaming.

"My dear sir," said J. Pemberton enthusiastically. "My dear sir, do you realize that you have just made the only intelligent remarks that have been made on these premises since—the summer of 1927?" He paused, then came through with an amendment. "Except, of course, those which I have made myself."

Humane Officer Hits 'Dudes' Who Ride Horses

DENVER.—(AP)—State Humane Officer W. B. Wheeler says the new generation out west "just doesn't understand horses."

"They ride in a motor car up to some mountain resort and then pile out and jump on a horse's back and expect the noble bay burner to go 50 miles an hour," says Wheeler.

"You just don't make horse and buggy history that fast. Even before all the roads were cluttered up with gasoline huggies the old timers, always thoughtful of their mounts, called it a day after 30 miles or so."

Her "Court Costume" Was Not So Arresting

Looking as demure as a schoolgirl, Joan Vickers, New York World's Fair dancer, recently arrested for excessive nudity, was a model of sartorial propriety when, as pictured at left, she appeared in court. At right she appears as Fair patrons—and shocked police—saw her.
